Cat Bathing As A Martial Art

Some people say cats never have to be bathed. They say cats lick themselves clean. They say cats have a special enzyme of some sort in their saliva that works like new, improved Wisk—dislodging the dirt where it hides and whisking it away. I've spent most of my life believing this folklore. Like most blind believers, I've been able to discount all the facts to the contrary, the kitty odors that lurk in the corners of the garage and dirt smudges that cling to the throw rug by the fireplace. The time comes, however, when a man must face reality: when he must look squarely in the face of massive public sentiment to the contrary and announce, "This cat smells like a port-a-potty on a hot day in Juarez." When that day arrives at your house, as it has in mine, I have some advice you might consider as you place your feline friend under your arm and head for the bathtub.

---Know that although the cat has the advantage of quickness and lack of concern for human life, you have the advantage of strength. Capitalize on that advantage by selecting the battlefield. Don't try to bathe him in an open area where he can force you to chase him. Pick a very small bathroom. If your bathroom is more than four feet square, I recommend that you get in the tub with the cat and close the sliding glass doors as if you were about to take a shower. (A simple shower curtain will not do. A berserk cat can shred a three-ply rubber shower curtain quicker than a politician can shift positions.)

---Know that a cat has claws and will not hesitate to remove all the skin from your body. Your advantage here is that you are smart and know how to dress to protect yourself. I recommend canvas overalls tucked into high-top construction boots, a pair of steel-mesh gloves, an army helmet, a hockey face mask, and a long-sleeved flak jacket.

---Prepare everything in advance. There is no time to go out for a towel when you have a cat digging a hole in your flak jacket. Draw the water. Make sure the bottle of kitty shampoo is inside the glass enclosure. Make sure the towel can be reached, even if you are lying on your back in the water.

---Use the element of surprise. Pick up your cat nonchalantly, as if to simply carry him to his supper dish. (Cats will not usually notice your strange attire. They have little or no interest in fashion as a rule. If he does notice your garb, calmly explain that you are taking part in a product testing experiment for J.C. Penney.)

---Once you are inside the bathroom, speed is essential to survival. In a single liquid motion, shut the bathroom door, step into the tub enclosure, slide the glass door shut, dip the cat in the water and squirt him with shampoo. You have begun one of the wildest 45 seconds of your life!

---Cats have no handes. Add the fact that he now has soapy fur, and the problem is radically compounded. Do not expect to hold on to him for more than 2 or 3 seconds at a time. When you have him, however, you must remember to give him another squirt of shampoo and rub like crazy. He'll then spring free and fall back into the water, thereby rinsing himself off. (The national record for cats is three latherings, so don't expect too much.)

---Next, the cat must be dried. Novice cat bathers always assume this part will be the most difficult, for humans generally are worn out at this point and the cat is just getting really determined. In fact, the drying process is simple compared to

Symptoms of Inner Peace

Be on the lookout for symptoms on inner peace. The hearts of a great many have already been exposed to inner peace and it is possible that people everywhere could come down with it in epidemic proportions. This could pose a serious threat to what has, up to now, been a fairly stable condition of conflict in the world. Some signs and symptoms of inner peace are:

- A tendency to think and act spontaneously rather than on fears based on past experiences.
- An unshakable ability to enjoy each moment.
- A loss of interest in judging other people.
- A loss of interest in interpreting the actions of others.
- A loss of interest in conflict.
- A loss of the ability to worry. (Very serious symptom)
- Frequent, overwhelming episodes of appreciation.
- Contented feeling of connection with others and nature.
- Frequent attacks of smiling.
- An increasing tendency to let things happen, rather than make them happen.
- An increased susceptibility to the love extended by others as well as the uncontrollable urge to extend it.

what you have just been through. That's because by now the cat is semi-permanently affixed to your right leg. You simply pop the drain plug with your foot, reach for your towel and wait. (Occasionally, however the cat will end up clinging to the top of your army helmet. If this happens, the best thing you can do is to shake him loose and to encourage him toward your leg.) After all the water is drained from the tub, it is a simple matter to just reach down and dry the cat.

In a few days the cat will relax enough to be removed from your leg. He will usually have nothing to say for about three weeks and will spend a lot of time sitting with his back to you. He might even become psycho-ceramic and develop the fixed state of a plaster figurine. You will be tempted to assume he is angry. This isn't usually the case. As a rule he is simply plotting ways to get through your defenses and injure you for life the next time you decide to give him a bath.

--- But at least, now he smells a lot better! ---

You know you've been at Fest too long when. . .

61. You see a cute girl in the street and have to fight off the urge to say, "Good morrow, my lady."
62. You'd rather wear a bodice than a bra.
63. You can put a broad sword down your bodice.
64. You like haggis, and you're not Scottish.
65. You start to show the bus driver your gate pass.
66. You dream in your festival accent . . . and it doesn't seem odd.
67. You're standing in a furniture store thinking, "Gee, that fabric would make a terrific doublet . . ."
68. You have tan lines that match your bodice neckline, NOT your swimsuit.
69. You see someone wearing a purple polo shirt on the street and think, "Uh-oh, only royalty is supposed to wear that color."
70. You take out your house keys as you walk to your tent.
71. You always carry a dagger . . . just in case.
72. You KNOW what's worn under a Scotsman's kilt.
73. You have your Festival name printed on your business cards.
74. You need to photocopy something and you ask where you can find a scribe.
75. Someone outside of Festival introduces you and you wait for them to give your title.
76. You've won an argument with the Costume Director because your sources are better than theirs.
77. You actually know how to fence with a sword and mug.
78. You sign your festival name on your personal checks.
79. You see someone with a knife and all you can think is, "Why isn't that peace-tied?"
80. You think of sheep as a "common" household pet.

Please, if you have more, submit them!
